History of Lockbourne

Lockbourne, Ohio - A true American small town! We are proud to be a small quaint community with the population of about 280 people, 100 households, five (5) churches and no stoplights.

We are home to three (3) parks and three (3) historical cemeteries. Lockbourne is rich in Ohio history. Considered the lock and canal center of Central Ohio, Lockbourne gets its unique name from the locks that surround the Village and Col. James Kilbourne, who was instrumental in its development.

With its location so close to Columbus, Lockbourne once served as a junction point between the Columbus Feeder Canal and the Ohio & Erie Canal, and was central to commerce in 19th century Ohio. Lockbourne maintained a staircase of 8 locks (numbered 23-30) and two canal basins. You can still view Lock 30 in Lockbourne's Locke Meadow Park today. The last remnants of the Columbus Feeder can also be found on both sides of the Big Walnut Creek.

When an Air Force base was built just east of Lockbourne, it served as a training facility for military pilots preparing for service in WWII. In 1945, it was renamed Lockbourne Army Air Base, after the Village. In 1946, the Tuskegee Airmen's 447th Composite Group moved to Lockbourne AAB, and became the only all-black Air Force Base that ever existed. Colonel Benjamin O. Davis, Jr., the first Afro-American to obtain the rank of General in the US Air Force, commanded the base.

During World War II, the Base trained Army Air Force glider pilots, including the Women Airforce Service Pilots (WASPs). In 1948, it was renamed Lockbourne Air Force Base and in 1974 the base was once again renamed after World War I flying ace, and Columbus native, Eddie Rickenbacker.

The Village is currently working to get the locks and canals on the National Registry of Historic Places. As development is occurring all around us, Lockbourne is working to responsibly develop its own growth with a vision and plan for its future.
